Custom Audio/Video/Network Traffic/File Transfer for your smart phone by Liteonesoft.com Support: Q&A: Question: Hello, I have a question about the server: I want to have the server in my own house to create a secure network between my smartphone and another device. The main aim of this is to have a video stream on a smartphone and recorded on a server, and be able to view the recorded content through a PC, a tablet or a smart TV without installing any additional software. This way I don't need to have the app on all of them. This is important for the following reasons: 1. When I go outside of my house, I cannot install the app on my smartphone. 2. When I go online, I need to install the app on my PC or tablet. 3. When I have the app on my PC or tablet, I cannot reach my smartphone. Do you think it is possible to install a server in my house, so I do not need to have the app on all devices? Answer: Hello, As far as I know, this should be possible with a Raspberry Pi. Since the Raspberry Pi is a pretty low-power computer, it can operate with low power. There are many options on how to do this, such as using a microSD card instead of a hard drive. Have you tried this? Best Regards, The Best Internet Security Software. Download the latest update of the best Antivirus/Malware/Adware/Spyware/FakeAV product today! Question: Is there any alternate to this software for my laptop i.e. Windows 7, I don't want to install this software on my laptop. Any alternate to this software. Effect of platinum-based chemotherapy on cochlear potentials in children. Evidence of sensorineural damage after platinum-based therapy has been reported previously. In addition, neurotoxic effects have been observed in the cochlea. To further explore the toxicity of platinum-based therapy on the cochlea, the objective of this study was to characterize the effects of such therapy on cochlear potentials. Data were collected prospectively. The study included children with lung cancer who underwent cisplatin chemotherapy. Control patients were matched to the study group according to the
